

The Osage Mission "A Great Distributing Center of Civilization"

Sister Mary Paul Fitzgerald "Beacon on the Plains"

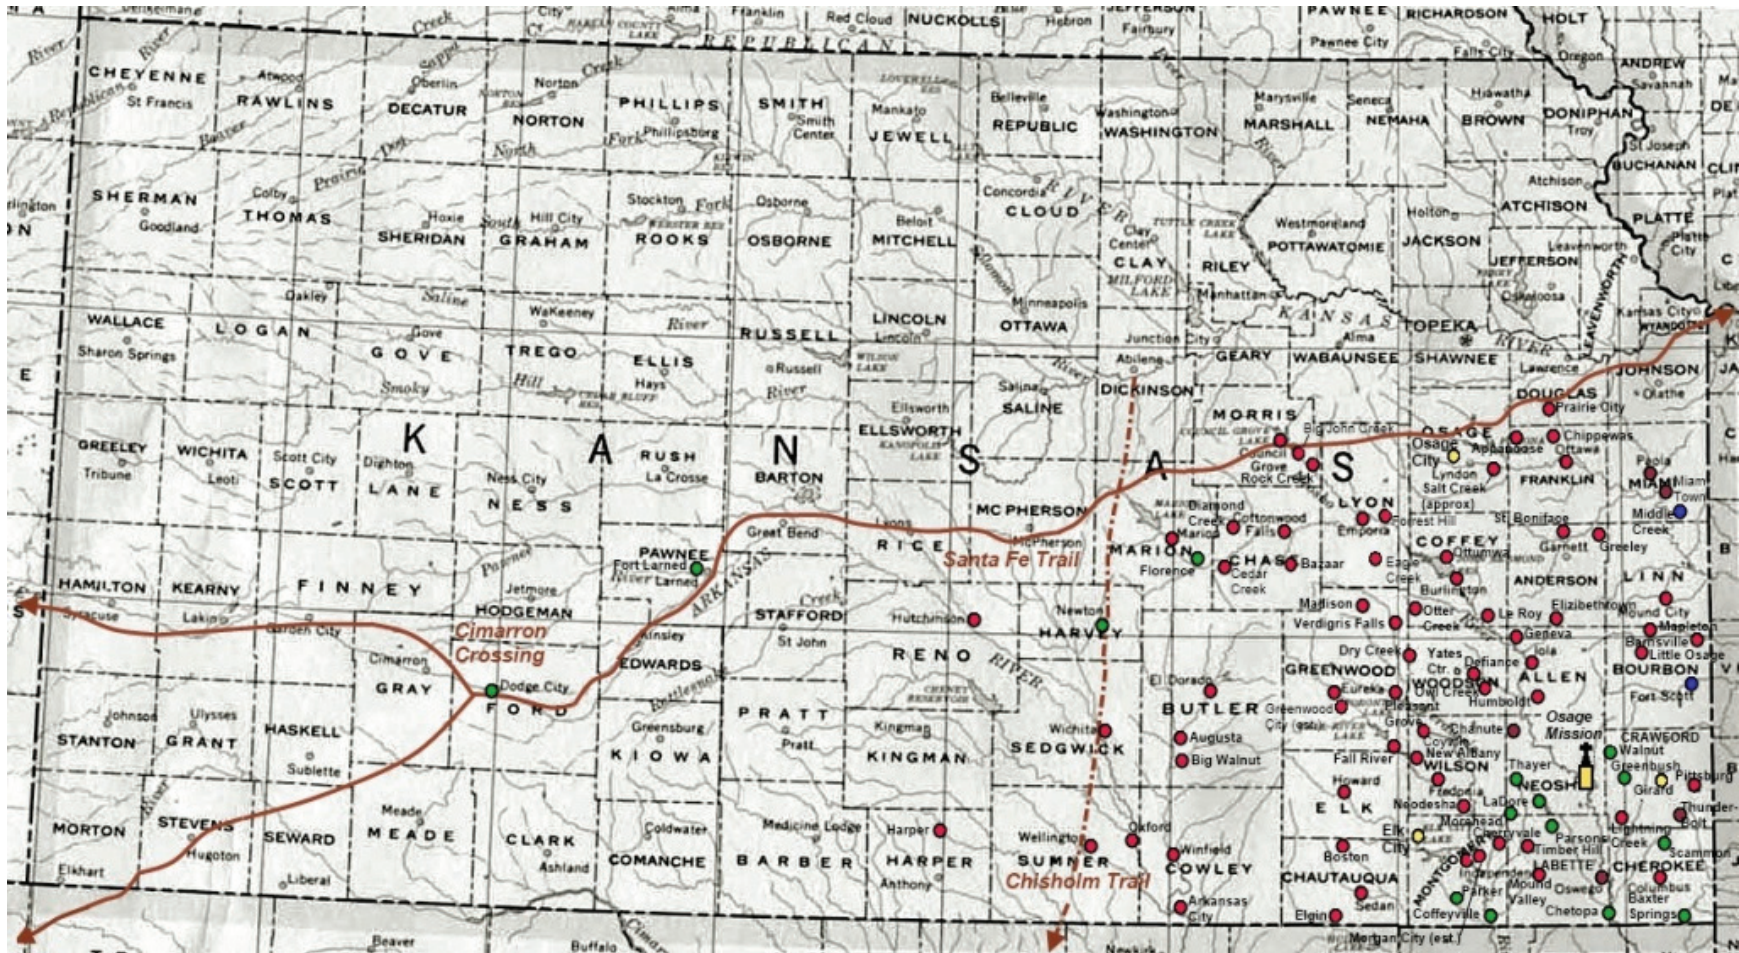

Mission Stations Established by Missionaries of Osage Mission

In addition to their role at the Mission, the Jesuits were also responsible for establishing mission stations and propagating the Christian faith across the frontier territory. Father Schoenmakers, Administrator of Osage Mission, established four mission stations, three with churches, all in the southeast corner of Kansas. Seven other priests were credited with starting stations and/or churches in various parts of the state. Of the seven, two names are prominent:

- Father Paul Mary Ponziglione - 87 mission stations across Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma (Indian territory) and Wyoming. It is also reported that he traveled as far south as Texas, and west into Colorado.
- Father Philip Colleton - 15 mission stations in Kansas and several missionary trips to Colorado.

It must be noted that much of this work was done during the 1840's through the 1860's prior to the availability of railroad travel across the plains area. The entire wide spread missionary work was done from horseback or by wagon. Father Ponziglione and Father Colleton visited many of the mission stations repeatedly. It is also noted that many of the mission stations were unsuccessful. Some settlements failed, but the contacts were made and the missionary influence extended.

The map and list that follows, illustrate the breadth of their travels. The list is color-coded to dots on the map to show which missions were established by a specific priest. Imagine the hardships and danger these priests encountered in an unsettled region.
